

A: You are using `\u%hh` to convert a Unicode codepoint into its ascii representation and you are using `\char"120000"` to do a backslash escape. These are different things and this is why you get a `\ub` being shown in your unicode log. If you want the `\ub` just do `"\b"` instead of `\char"120000"` See "Oracle Database provides a string escape that lets you generate a string that can be used within character constants, REF BLANK, and substitute variables. Each of these string escapes is preceded by `\`, except for the REF, BLANK, and VARIANCE string escapes. REF, BLANK, and VARIANCE string escapes are generated using a backslash to escape a non-alphanumeric character. In addition, Oracle Database recognizes the following escape sequences: `\b` Backslashes, the backslash and `b` work the same way." " Newline" `\r` Carriage return" So for your case `\ub` is just `"\ub"`. And you can use `\char"120000"` to escape a `\`. Q: R Variable name variable in R i have a question about variable names in R: I have these variables: # A tibble: 5 x 2 b1 b2
