ASPack 2.42 Multilingual Free Download Q: Javascript Canvas onclick handler has run before onclick handler is complete I have an onclick handler running on the onclick event of a canvas. The canvas is an image. When the onclick event runs it triggers a function which functions as a check to see if the clicked button (which is an image) is the "promotion" button for an item. I do not want the onclick to run when the button is clicked outside of the promotion, so I have put a hide function on the promotion button to remove it from the canvas. When the button is clicked outside of the promotion, I'm still checking the button to see if it is the promotion button. I thought that once the hide function has run the onclick would not run, but it still will. I also tried making the onclick return false before running the function. Is this possible? I'm using jquery 1.4.2. A: This is happening because you're calling (or rather bubbling) the onclick handler and the event flow doesn't quite work how you expect. You need to rethink your click handler so it's not tied to a particular element. Instead, have it grab the button's ID or style or data-* property, and if it's the one you're looking for, call the function you want. The (imo) best way to do this is to use jQuery's click() function like so: $(canvas).click(function() { if $(this).data('promotion') { console.log('Promotion!', $(this).data('promotion')); } }); ...or, just bind directly to the event by selecting the type "button" (
