those who regularly browse the Web, apps for managing your PC, such as Internet browsers, for e-mail, and for entertainment, are required tools for doing their job. One of the biggest challenges in using a web browser on a mobile device, however, is the limited screen space. The lack of space to display the entire Web page in a single shot can lead to many frustrating moments. The need to scroll up and down to view all the information the page contains may also cause browsing to take much longer than expected. Fortunately, there are now some great solutions for mobile Internet browsing that are equipped with software that increases your ability to view a page. These include WebReaders from Waze, which is described as a, "Browser-based navigational application with web-optimized PDF support and exclusive content for drivers." To use it, you simply install it to the phone, then open up a web page. WebReaders then analyzes it and presents the information to you, with links to the most pertinent content of the page. If you scroll to the top of the page, it not only shows you the title of the page, but also offers additional information on this, such as how much of the page is available, if it is interactive, how many images are on the page, and which links lead to other pages on that site. Many companies, such as ShareThis, also have apps that help increase your ability to view the content on any web page you choose to open. It is a free download, and also has a comprehensive list of other tools that can also help increase your mobile web browsing experience. For those who do not mind paying a few bucks for a service that lets you save time online, there are also desktop clients, such as

DownThemAll, that help view and save pages more quickly. As you can see, there are a number of ways that you can make browsing easier and faster on your mobile devices. 1. previously wet etching processes. More particularly, this invention relates to an improved method and apparatus for washing the passageways of a previously etched silicon substrate. An exemplary silicon semiconductor processing operation is shown in FIG. 1. Shown in FIG. 1 are a silicon wafer 20, having at least one major surface, a silicon nitride layer 22 and a photoresist layer 24. Etchants (not shown) etch a desired pattern in the silicon nitride layer 22 and the photoresist layer 24. The photoresist layer 24 is then stripped off. The silicon nitride layer 22 is stripped, cleaned, and recoated, as shown in FIG. 1. A problem that can be encountered during the recoating step of the process is the formation of residues. As shown in FIG. 2, residue 26 forms during the etching of the silicon nitride layer 22. The residue 26 is a combination of silicon nitride 22, silicon oxide 28 and contaminants 30, such as hydrocarbons, created during the etching process. In order to remove the residue 26, the silicon substrate 20 is subjected to a strip or wash step, as shown in FIG. 2. This wash step is typically accomplished by use of a chemical sl
