The Longest Five Minutes

High-level gameplay summary

The Longest Five Minutes is a game of chance, literally. The player is given a random selection of five minutes to collect the necessary items and return to the mainland alive.

Each time there is a roll of the dice, a "minutes" value is obtained using a table of random numbers. This value is added to your current "minutes" value, and the new current value is checked to see if it exceeds a "return" amount.

If it does, you are returned and go back to the start of the game. If your new value is lower than the return level, then you can spend cash on items.

As you approach the return point, your current "minutes" value starts decreasing, and will return to the return point or zero, if it goes below zero it's game over.

You can use items at the beginning of the game to increase your "minutes" value, or use cash items at the end to subtract from your current "minutes" value, and thus have a higher chance of returning to the home island.

If you die in this sequence, you lose all of your cash items, and start back at the beginning of the game.

Note that returning is somewhat like using Windows "F8" key - no items are used up if you return.

Extended Gameplay summary

Each of the seven levels in the game are given a number. Every time you win one of these levels, a sequence of dice are rolled to determine whether you're going to lose one of those levels or not.

For instance, level 1 is a forty-five minute game. If you lose
