Photoshop CS6. Layers In Photoshop CS6, layers are used to create additional subregions that offer greater control over the image and work with other layers. Layers exist in the Backgrounds and Layers dialog (CS6 only). Layers are described in more detail in the following sections. The ability to create, name, and organize layers is one of the most important features of Photoshop. The Main Menu contains the Layers panel and Layer Tools panel, providing easy access to all layers. Figure 6-1 shows the Layers panel, which is located on the right side of the image window. You can use the Layers panel to control the visibility of individual layers, move layers up or down in the layer stack, delete layers, duplicate layers, and so on. You can open the Layers panel by selecting View → Layers from the menu. Alternatively, you can press the spacebar to display the panel. Some tutorials recommend naming layers with sensible names. For example, you may want to name one layer "Head" or "Skull," and another layer "Face." This way, you know exactly what part of your photo you have incorporated into the layer and what its purpose is. Layers are logically organized in the Layers panel. Any layers you create are grouped within the Layers panel by type or category. (The list of layers in a category is displayed in the layer panel). In Figure 6-1, the figure shows three layers: "Foreground," "Group A," and "Group B." As a general rule, you create the main subject of your image in the Foreground layer and the objects or compositional elements such as the clouds or sky that contribute to the main subject in another layer. For example, an image of a rainbow and the sky in which it appears will usually be organized so that the rainbow is in the Foreground layer, and the clouds and sky are in the layer called Cloud. If you want to show a transparent background layer, place it on the Layers panel between the Foreground and Background layers. By doing so, you can see the entire image through that layer. Layers also have an RGB layer mask (color negative). The RGB layer mask is a handy tool that enables you to selectively mask out portions of an image so that you can change the area without modifying the rest of the image. Take a look at the below sections to see how to organize your layers

Q: Write a function that allows the first element of a list to be changed I need to write a function that takes a list and a number of elements as arguments and allows the first element of the list to be changed. So I can have a list like: a = ['x', 'y', 'z'] and function can change the first element to 'o'. The function should return the whole list. In case the function doesn't work, I will need to know the name of the function because I have many functions of the same sort (also with parameters that I can't easily generalize) A: When you find yourself writing "just define a function", you probably should use the built-in function: >>> a = ['x', 'y', 'z'] >>> a.insert(0, 'o') >>> a ['o', 'y', 'z'] Note that functions like len and any are more efficient in Python, since they have a particular data structure in memory for the list. You could make your own more functional-minded function using islice(), the slice notation, etc., but you'd lose out on these benefits. Your specific problem has a very simple solution: def change_first(alist, num_elements): return alist[:num_elements] + (num_elements,) * alist[num_elements:] Of course you could use a loop or similar to build up the new list, but the slice notation here is very nice. Q: Why does taxicab's usage decrease in the most recent times? I read somewhere that cab-hailing app like Uber, Lyft etc are growing in usage because they provide cheaper taxi services, not only ride on one journey, but also to the travellers regularly. Why do we see a decrease in taxi use? A: Taxi's use has been declining because taxis are better able to communicate, and even offer innovative services. Taxi's are moving away from being taxis and becoming service and delivery vehicles. Taxi's are slowly disappearing from our lives as they become luxury, and we drive to the Tuk Tuk for a drink or
