Hi, what were we talking about? Technically we could all talk about anything, at any time. Well, I think that's it right there. I have long wondered about 3D roller coaster games. I have seen them in arcades, set up in gaming rooms (a temporary place you go for a few bucks or one you pay to play forever. Don't get confused, I get paid when I write and post. Well, SEGA claims to have a big breakthrough in that my neighborhood arcade rolled up a game that's on par with the latest 3D multi-player games on Xbox 360 and PS3. It's called 5 Points and it's what the video game industry has been calling an MMO (multi-player online). See? MMO. The game is cheap and doesn't come with a 3D glasses-free experience, however, I prefer to stare at cool futuristic designs with my glasses off. I like the idea of that. I'll play any game that's cheap and not-fun. Anyway, SEGA brought the game over to the US, added one of the new "party" controllers and added an arcade button. This means that you can have a multi-player experience with one Gamecube controller and one arcade controller (they're big with an arcade button on the back that makes it easier to hold with your hand. My video game handling hand has trouble keeping ones near the front. But my right hand never lets me down when it comes to controlling video game. Sure, you can't play the game with a 360 controller and this is one I believe this game lends itself to. But, I can be a party of many people at the same time. I'll tell you what, this game is addictive. You can spend hours in it and not get bored. The idea is to play these balls-alot. Normally, you have to get to the bottom of the ball and pop the buttons to get the ball rolling. This won't work on a Gamecube controller. All that will happen is that you could get an arcade restart. Just as long as you have that button in the front you're fine. However, with some button modification you will get it in the back. Thus, you'll be able to get more points when you pop
